University Press of Florida, United States, 1992. Paperback. Condition: New. New. Language: English . Brand New Book. Jean Burden s new poems are characterized by exact observation, unobtrusive technical virtuosity, and a delicately glancing humor that accents and indeed intensifies their pathos. --Howard Nemerov Inside the most lyrical evocation of a past event, a lost love, a long friendship, Jean Burden displays a tough-minded candor that makes these poems accessible, appealing, and, above all, durable--a wonderful book. --Maxine Kumin Jean Burden s poems are silky, meditative, purposeful. In a world that is not necessarily sensible, they are filled with the deft cadences of reason. --Mary Oliver The intelligence and lyricism displayed in Jean Burden s first book surges through these new poems. With luminous grace, they play upon the themes of love, loss, human kinship to animals, and the nature of seasons, blending humor with an inner vision influenced by her study of Zen. Still passionate, their rein is looser than her earlier poems, their outlook less romantic. As though observing this release, she writes, You ask what lasts./ I used to know: stones, the pull/ and suck of tides, trees/ rooted in ore. . . . What lasts? she asks again. With buoyant disregard for certainty, she responds: The turning day, falling water/ over stones, the sweet disorder/ of leaves, / moons that come and go, / wings. Burden s technical mastery is never slack. Poet Paul Zimmer describes her work as human, witty, and passionate, yet carefully rendered and framed. Linda Pastan says that her poems celebrate the mysterious and dangerous world they so marvelously describe. And Josephine Jacobsen says, Her work educates the ear and the mind. From deeply felt elegies for parents, lovers, and friends to an eerie drama or a playful dialogue poem, her work...
