Excerpt from Aria Da Capo: A Play in One Act The curtain rises on a stage set for a Harlequinade, a merry black and white interior. Directly behind the footlights, and running parallel with them, is a long table, covered with a gay black and white cloth, on which is spread a banquet. At the opposite ends of this table, seated on delicate thin-legged chairs with high backs, are Pierrot and Columbine, dressed according to the tradition, excepting that Pierrot is in lilac, and Columbine in pink. They are dining. columbine: Pierrot, a macaroon!! cannot live without a macaroon! Pierrot: My only love, You are so intense! Is it Tuesday, Columbine? - I ll kiss you if it s Tuesday.
