At this point it may be of particular interest to call attention to the fact that in earlier years, such as, for example, in the STONE AGE and the BRONZE AGE, MAN had a greater need for this same type of teeth for fighting purposes. As time went on, this variety of teeth known as canine teeth, which he possessed in conjunction with other varieties, has degenerated compared to its previously very marked development. So we find the IRON AGE, as well as the later periods of human development, in which wonderfully constructed cutting and fighting implements were used considerably (to take the place of his canine teeth), that these teeth were greatly reduced in their general development. The sixth class, the RODENTS, include squirrels, rats, beavers,...
