Excerpt: . . . 11 The story with them was they were all in the same vehicle, crashed the car into a bridge abutment, they were brought to the emergency department at Maine Medical Center. One of them had a fractured leg. It was a fairly high energy accident, so that the potential for severe injuries was great. They were lethargic; they had all been at a party. In talking with them, they had received their high-dose methadone at the clinic that morning, had taken a take-home dose either between two of them or all three of them - it was not clear to me whether two of them or all three of them - but they ingested their methadone in the parking lot, partied for an indeterminate amount of time and decided to drive home on the Maine Turnpike and then ultimately crashed the car. So I would indicate to you that...
