Excerpt: .perhaps, by this very petition, giving as reasons therefor that the certificates were made a tender in law in discharge of all private debts and contracts whatsoever, thus repealing or enervating the act to which this was called an addition, in one of its most material parts, and that he was further of the opinion that it would prove fatal to the country. In the modified form above described in which it afterwards passed, the act met with his approval. This was the last legislation on the statute books connected with the redemption of the bills. The province had already established a credit upon which it could secure loans. In June, 1750, the treasurer had been authorized to borrow five thousand pounds in Spanish milled dollars, on his notes payable with six per cent. interest in June, 1752.2 Hutchinson says, Few people were at...
