Excerpt from Modern Sheet Copper Practices: For Architects, Engineers, Specification Writers, Sheet Metal Workers This drawing shows the procedure in forming roof pans. Starting with a blank or plain sheet of copper, the cor ners are notched to cut away some of the metal that is not needed to make a weather-tight construction, and which would be troublesome in making the seams. This Operation is followed by making the reverse bends at the top and bottom edges of the sheet, then turning up the sides with their additional small bends, thus form ing pans that can easily be interlocked on the roof. There the standing seams are completed by simply clos ing the last two bends with regular hand tools. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
