Excerpt from An Address Delivered Before the Hampshire, Franklin, and Hampden Agricultural Society, at Northampton, Oct. 29, 1829 But the earth has suffered a sad reverse. The loss of innocence was followed by the loss of paradise. The ground has been cursed for man s sake, and doomed to bring forth thorns and thistles, and man himself to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. From that sad hour to the present time, agriculture has required our utmost labor and ingenu ity. Useless and noxious weeds spring up spontaneously, and ?ourish in all their pomp and luxuriance, while every plant adapted to our sustenance or pleasure, must be nur tured by our care. In our own fertile and happy land, how few plants are the native products of the soil? With the exception of your Indian corn, your whole farms are stocked with vegetables of other climes. Before these could take root, immense forests were to be removed and before they could ? ourish, they must be enclosed from grazing beasts, or the beasts them selves exterminated. All this effected, your constant...
