Guide to using a lichen based index to nitrogen air quality

Indicator lichens

Indicator lichens used in this guide fall into three growth forms:

- 1. Bushy lichen

 Attached to the bark at the base.
 Branched and shrub-like, attached to the bark at the base. Branches rounded in section or strap-like with a distinct upper and lower surface.
- 2. Leafy lichen

 Attached to the bark from the lower surface.
 Leaf-like lobes closely or loosely attached to the bark from the lower surface.
- 3. Crustose or granular lichen

 Closely attached to the bark and cannot be removed without cutting the bark.

Glossary

Thallus – the main vegetative body of the lichen.

Cilia – hair-like outgrowths from the margins of the lobes.

Sexual reproduction occurs in rounded to elongate fruiting bodies in which spores are produced.

Many lichens reproduce asexually from propagules. These include:

Sclerite – pin-like projections from the thallus, often darker than the thallus.

Soredia – pale powdery granules produced from round or elongated capsules in the thallus surface.

Lobes strap-like in section

Pseudovernia furfuracea – like grey upper surface, black lower surface # except on young lobes), with numerous pin-like scla on the upper surface #.

Evernia prunastri – Lobes pale green on the upper surface and white on the lower surface #, strap-like, flattened with soredia # present on upper surface of well-developed specimens.

1. Bushy – branched and shrub-like, att

Reviews

This publication is indeed gripping and intriguing. It is actually written in basic terms and not difficult to understand. I am just pleased to explain how here is the greatest publication we have read through during my own lifestyle and could be the best pdf for at any time.

Field Studies Council, 2013. Condition: New. , colour illustrations. . Chart. NEW. . This guide provides a simple method for determining gaseous nitrogen pollution that can be used by anyone interested in the impacts of gaseous N on sensitive habitats in the UK. It includes a simple identification key to epiphytic lichens growing on oak and birch that show sensitivity to, or tolerance of, atmospheric N pollution. The lichen species present at your location are used to calculate a lichen indicator score (LIS), which is then converted into a standardised nitrogen air quality index (NAQI), showing the nitrogen air quality at your location.
